The U’s Information Security Office (ISO) is urging students, faculty, and staff to remain cautious and alert to possible phishing scams designed to coincide with the COVID-19 outbreak.

Phishing attempts often take the form of spoofed emails, directing recipients to enter login credentials at a fake website that looks almost identical to the legitimate one. University students, faculty, and staff are encouraged to scrutinize official-looking emails and watch for the following common signs of an email phishing attempt:

- Unusual language, poor spelling, or grammar.
- Messaging designed to provoke an emotional response.
- A URL that doesn’t match the corresponding web page.
- A link that doesn’t match the promised content.

To better protect yourself and your login credentials, please follow these best practices:

- Forward the suspicious email as an attachment to phishing@utah.edu. ISO staff will analyze the email and notify you whether it’s a phishing attempt.
- Guard your uNID and password like you do your Social Security number.
- Change your passwords often.
- Lock your device screens when not in use.

For more information about phishing, please review this UIT Knowledge Base article.

For more information about recent COVID-19 scams, please visit the following posts from the Federal Trade Commission (FTC).

If you have questions, your local IT support staff may be able to assist, or you may contact your respective help desk: UIT Help Desk (801-581-4000, option 1) or ITS Service Desk (801-587-6000).
